Street deaths ‘almost like a slaughter’

Winter to worsen homeless crisis, activists warn

By CATHARINE DOWNEY

February 22, 2023

The Boston Globe

The bodies of two homeless men were found last month at Queen and Sherburne streets. It’s “almost like a slaughter,” said severe social worker Cathy Goff. “Two in a row, it’s too much. A society can’t assimilate this any longer.”

The increasingly harsh conditions in Boston are already taking a heavy toll on the city’s homeless, who are facing colder temperatures and more limited resources. According to the Boston Police Department, there have been 24 homeless deaths in the city so far this year, compared to 14 in the same period last year.

“Homelessness is a national disaster, but the number of homeless deaths is a national scandal,” said a statement from the National Coalition to End Homelessness.

The number of homeless deaths in Boston has been on the rise in recent years, with 16 deaths reported in 2021, 18 in 2022, and 24 so far this year. The city has been working to address the issue of homelessness, but the problem remains severe.

In a new report, the National Coalition to End Homelessness said that the number of homeless deaths in the country has increased by 21% since 2019, with 1,708 deaths reported in 2021. The group said that the pandemic and the resulting economic crisis have exacerbated the issue of homelessness.

The report also highlighted the fact that homeless individuals are disproportionately affected by COVID-19 and other health issues, which can lead to a shorter life expectancy.

The city of Boston has been working to address the issue of homelessness, with a focus on providing more housing options and increasing access to services. However, the problem remains severe, and there is a need for continued efforts to address the issue.

Holocaust survivor urges: Stop the hate

Woman, 81, captures kids with stories

By PRINCE GOMEZ

As the assemblage of about 70 children gathered around her (Rebekah Greenman placed and already seated on her lap), Mrs. Greenman noted that one of her stories is about the Holocaust.

“Thank you for coming,” Mrs. Greenman said. “I have a lot to tell you. I have a lot of stories to tell you.”

The story about the Holocaust was especially touching, as it was told by a woman who had lived through the events herself. Mrs. Greenman spoke about the suffering and loss that people endured during that time, and the importance of remembering those who were affected.

The children were captivated by the stories, and Mrs. Greenman’s anecdotes about the Holocaust were particularly moving. The children asked questions and interacted with the storyteller, and it was clear that they were learning from her.

“Thank you for coming,” Mrs. Greenman said again, as the children filed out of the room.

Shelter inspires addicts’ fresh start

By TRACY HOFFMAN

It is a small drug, an alcohol

A woman walks down the street, her face obscured by a hood. She appears to be struggling with addiction.

“I’ve watched friends be locked up and have been in rehab myself,” she said. “I’ve had friends who have been in rehab.

The woman is part of a group of people who are receiving help at a shelter for people with substance use disorders.

“This is a place where people can come to get help,” said a staff member.

The shelter provides support and resources for people who are struggling with addiction, including detoxification, therapy, and support groups.

The woman is one of many who have come to the shelter seeking help.

“People come here when they are ready to make a change,” said another staff member.

The shelter has helped many people in the past, and it continues to be a valuable resource for those in need.

United Way

Gives $20 million

Gregory J. Click, CEO of the United Way of Greater Boston, announced on Monday that his organization will give $20 million to support recovery efforts following last year’s tornadoes.

“This gift will enable us to continue our work,” Click said in a press release.

The funds will be used to support agencies and organizations that are working to help those affected by the tornadoes.

The United Way has a long history of supporting recovery efforts following disasters, and it has been a valuable resource for those in need in the past.

The agency has been active in the Boston area for many years, and it has a strong track record of providing support to those in need.

“We are committed to helping those affected by the tornadoes,” Click said.

The United Way will be working closely with local partners to ensure that the funds are effectively used.

The agency has already distributed funds to a number of organizations, and it will continue to provide support in the weeks and months to come.

The United Way is a valuable resource for those in need, and it is committed to continuing its work to help those affected by the tornadoes.

End of a chapter

By PAUL MOLONEY

The end of an era for the Ex-Offender Program, which has served刑人 3,200 people in the past 17 years, has been marked by a poignant ceremony at the program’s headquarters in Dorchester.

The ceremony was held on Monday, and it marked the end of the program’s run, which has been a beacon of hope for many former offenders.

The program has provided support and resources for former offenders, helping them to reintegrate into society and find employment.

The end of the program has been met with sadness and emotion, as many former offenders have expressed their gratitude for the support they received.

“I am grateful for the support I received from the program,” said one former offender.

The program has been a valuable resource for many people, and it has helped to improve the lives of many former offenders.

The program’s run has been marked by many milestones, and it has helped many people to turn their lives around.

“I am proud of what the program has accomplished,” said another former offender.

The program has been a beacon of hope for many people, and it has helped to improve the lives of many former offenders.